"THEIR STEADY JOB"

One-Reel Universal Comedy
Starring NEELY EDWARDS

NERVY NED and his valet replenish their wardrobes by throwing a pair of stuffed gloves in the lake and stealing the clothes of all the gallant would-be rescuers. They are walking along seeking work, when a sudden shower threatens to spoil their new raiment. They buy a couple of dollar umbrellas for $2 in the emergency, but as soon as they have purchased the umbrellas the rain stops and when they try to sell the umbrellas back to the dealer, he will only refund half of the price. They later discover they have been "done," as the "rain" was caused by a sprinkler system concealed in the dealer's awning.

They read of the rapidly increasing scarcity of jobs and are dejectedly sitting on a park bench when they see a man drowning in the lake. They yell to him and find out where he works. Leaving him to his fate, they rush to his place of business and apply for his job. They are too late, however; the man who threw him in the lake has already obtained the position. They are just being given another job with the same firm when a crowd of others come from the park seeking the job, and, recognizing their clothes on Ned and his companion, call a cop and have the pair thrown in jail.
